

After a successful 34 year career as a Computer Engineer with IBM, Patrice embraced retirement with the belief that every new chapter brings new opportunities to make a difference. Today, she serves as the Office Manager here at SoLa Gymnastics, where she uses her organizational, technical, and leadership skills to help create a positive and welcoming environment for athletes, families, coaches, and staff.

Beyond her professional journey, she is a proud two-time breast cancer survivor. Her experience has strengthened her faith, resilience, and appreciation for life. It has inspired her to encourage others to prioritize their health, embrace hope, and never underestimate the importance of early detection and self-advocacy.

Whether solving complex technical challenges during her years at IBM or supporting the daily operations of a busy gymnastics facility, she has always believed in leading with integrity, compassion, and a commitment to excellence.

She enjoys giving back to her community, supporting young athletes as they pursue their goals, and sharing her story to inspire others to face life's challenges with courage and determination. She believes that our greatest achievements are measured not only by our careers, but by the lives we touch and the hope we share.
